Re: Education Sales Consultant (Remote)

Dear Admissions and Sales Manager,

I am applying for the Education Sales Consultant role. I will be straight about where I am coming from: my career has been building the systems sales teams use, not sitting in the seat. I want to move into it, and I think I would be unusually good at it in an education business.

I know the sector. I led the technology side of South Australia's vocational education strategy, and before that I delivered the student CRM at the Australian Institute of Business and CRM rollouts for universities. I understand enrolment criteria, compliance, and why a clean record matters when an auditor asks.

I know the pipeline. For ten years I have configured HubSpot, Salesforce and Zoho for sales teams: the stages, the follow-up rules, the reports a manager reads on Monday. I built Doorknock, a tool that researches a prospect before the call so the salesperson starts with something to say. I will keep APC's CRM accurate because I have seen what it costs when nobody does: at one charity, records merged on the wrong field had put their donation totals out by $3.8 million.

And I can hold a conversation with someone who is not sure yet. Most of my work is sitting with people who want different things, finding out what they actually need, and getting them to a decision. A prospective student weighing a career in emergency health care is having the same conversation, with more at stake for them.

I would welcome the chance to talk.

Kind regards,

Aaron Steele
